STAT

Please pardon the delay in answering your letter of 25 November 1949, but I have been out of town for a while. I can inform you, of course, that you may have an interview when you return to Washington, but I must also inform you that, at present, there is no opportunity of placing you in a position with the Central Intelligence Agency. We already have many more qualified applicants than we can use, and the best I can promise is that we shall add your name to the list.

With kindest wishes, believe me,

Sincerely,

ER 0-7717 ; disp via ER 12/6/49

Here are the replies to the questions asked in your letter of 9 April.

1. The Central Intelligence Agency does employ women.
2. It is possible that you would be considered for an appropriate opening. However, as nearly as can be determined now, we cannot foresee a suitable place for you within the reasonably near future.
3. No training period is required prior to actual entrance on duty with this Agency.

Under the circumstances the only suggestion I could make would be that if you are contemplating some other line, you should not wait for the fairly remote possibility of something occurring here.

Your continued interest is appreciated, and it is regretted that a more favorable reply cannot be made.

Sincerely,

[Redacted]

Thank you for your letter of 31 March requesting information relative to employment with this Agency.

We have checked our current vacancies and find that we have no opening at present where we might use you to our mutual advantage. We will, however, retain your letter for future reference should an opening occur for which you might be considered. In such event we will contact you.

Your interest and desire to be of service are appreciated.

Sincerely,
